A golden age rolls to an end as train depot shuts its doors

When train No. 353 leaves Detroit for Chicago at 11:40 a.m. Tuesday, Michigan Central Depot at Vernor and 16th Street will close its classic doors for the first time in its 75-year-history — perhaps for good.

Michigan's finest monument to the golden age of railroads, with its cavernous waiting room and 68-foot-high

The abandoned station deteriorated inside and out

On April 9, 2009, Detroit City Council voted 7-1 to order the Michigan Depot immediately demolished

The owner of the vacant Michigan Central Depot wants two to three years to determine the best use of the 96-year-old building. That's what was said to the Detroit Building and Safety Engineering Department today during a meeting to discuss the fate of the 17-story depot owned by local trucking tycoon Manuel "Matty" Moroun. The Detroit City Council earlier this month passed an emergency resolution calling for the building to be razed and Moroun billed for the estimated $3.6 million demolition cost. Today's hearing could set in motion demolition in 30 days. A message was left for Dan Stamper, president of the Detroit Bridge International Bridge Co. and spokesman for Moroun on the depot situation. Stamper previously has said the building is admittedly an eyesore and symbol of urban decay, but said options should be explored to renovate it

Summary

- Ford has plans to spend $11 billion on all electric vehicles between now and 2022.
- Ford is hoping to launch its first all electric vehicle in the Spring of 2020. It will be a performance mid-sized all electric SUV.
- Currently, the market for all electric vehicles is relatively small. Ford is betting demand will expand as multiple products options become available to consumers.

Ford Motor Company (NYSE:F) has plans to become a major competitor in the all electric vehicle market. Right now the company is behind other competitors like Tesla (TSLA) in the all electric vehicle market. But Ford plans to catch up to its

The maker of Jeep SUVs and Ram pickup trucks says if its U.S. dealers want to carry the electric vehicles that it plans to field in the future, they'll need to get the infrastructure to support electrification as the automaker is on a mission to make full EVs half of its sales by 2030.

The goal is to have the infrastructure completed at all of Stellantis' more than 2,600 U.S. dealers by the end of the first quarter of 2024, the year that many of the first all-electric vehicles will be available to U.S. retail customers. The costs for the investment will depend on the dealership and its needs.

"If our dealers want to continue to offer our electric vehicles into the future," spokeswoman Diane Morgan said in an email, "they will need to make the necessary infrastructure modifications in their dealerships to sell those vehicles."

How does a title get tangled?

To understand how a title gets tangled, you need to know the basics of property ownership of a property.

Introduction

Ownership in a property can become very complicated and confusing when one owner dies, is divorced, or moves out. People who remain in the home may believe they now own the home. If the remaining resident's name is not on the deed, they are not an official owner of the property. This situation is known as "tangled title." If the remaining resident's name is not on the deed, they will be unable to sell the property.

The truth about tax abatements: without them, Detroit has the highest commercial tax rate in the US – and nearly twice as high as the suburbs

Commercial/Industrial Property Tax Mills

Detroit	87 mills
Pontiac	55 mills
Auburn Hills	53 mills
Novi	52 mills
Troy	50 mills

Fact check: The City Does Not Give Cash to Businesses in Tax Incentives

- Tax abatements are a discount
- When builders build a new project, they pay taxes when it's built
- Tax abatements are a discount on the new taxes

Otherwise, every company deciding where to build would face this choice:

Detroit	87 Mills
Novi	52 Mills

Tax incentives turned abandoned Cadillac Stamping into a new Lear Seating Plant

Tax incentives helped turn the abandoned Kettering School into Dakkota factory

Helped turn 40-year abandoned Hudson's site into second tallest building in Michigan

Helped turn this abandoned storefront on McNichols into Marcus Jones' Detroit Pizza Bar

Tax incentives turned 40-year abandoned Marlborough Apartments to new affordable housing

Tax abatements have been needed to bring jobs back to Detroit for decades

Here's what Mayor Coleman Young said about tax abatements in February 1981:

"I make no apologies for tax abatements. The 116 companies that have received abatements have invested nearly $500 million of their own money in Detroit."

"And, of even greater importance, I believe, are the 3,000 new jobs we brought to Detroit."

This is what we would have without tax incentives

Instead, in less than 10 years, we've brought tens of thousands of new jobs into Detroit

Detroit — A group of area residents who secured community benefits for the $1.5 billion District Detroit project held a ceremony Monday to sign a letter in support of their agreement with the developers.

“I’m very proud of this agreement,” Jonathan Kinloch, a member of the Neighborhood Advisory Council, said Monday of the agreement with Olympia Development and The Related Cos. “I’m very proud of the process. You had a number of us who came together who did not know each other. We had no clue the direction we were going to go in, but we talked, we listened to the various

District Detroit is asking for $800 million in tax discounts over the next 35 years

Discounts coming from city taxpayers:	$0
Discounts coming from DPS school taxes:	$0
Discounts coming from library taxes:	$0

So where are the tax abatements coming from?

$400 Million over 35 years from taxes paid to the Downtown Development Authority

By law, DDA taxes may not be used outside of Downtown and cannot be used by the City of Detroit General Fund

In 1975, Mayor Young successfully convinced Lansing to pass the Downtown Development Authority Act so that all growth in downtown property taxes must go to the DDA for downtown investment, not the city general fund

Mayor Young believed that Detroit couldn't rely on property taxes – he believed Detroit's future depended on growing the income tax

How did Mayor Young's vision for a city funded by income taxes instead of property taxes work out?

2023-2024 Detroit Budgeted Revenues

City Property Taxes	$135 million
City Income Taxes	$395 million

Where does the other $400 million in abatement discounts come from?

Plans to rehabilitate the former Fisher Body Plant for a mixed-use development with 433 residential units moved forward Monday as the Detroit City Council unanimously approved a brownfield plan for the site.

The developer, Fisher 21 Lofts, LLC, requested $24.8 million in tax increment financing for the demolition and environmental remediation of the site that sits on three parcels at 6051 Hastings St., 666 Harper Ave. and 991 Harper. The overall value of the plan is $31.3 million, which includes local brownfield costs, according to the city.

Detroit's revised adult-use marijuana ordinance has provoked yet another lawsuit, this time from a hopeful MJ business owner and a company that operates multiple medical cannabis dispensaries in the city.

According to the Detroit Free Press, plaintiffs Arden Kassab, an aspiring cannabis entrepreneur, and PharmaCo, a subsidiary of marijuana multistate operator Red White & Bloom, want the court to halt the city's application process for limited retail, microbusiness and consumption lounge licenses.

A prospective Detroit marijuana business owner and a cannabis company with several medical marijuana dispensaries in Detroit have filed a lawsuit against the city over its recreational marijuana ordinance.

The lawsuit, filed Wednesday in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, said the ordinance gives an unfair preference to longtime Detroiters, and is asking the court to invalidate the ordinance and stop the city from accepting applications for the limited licenses, which includes dispensaries, microbusinesses and consumption lounges.

The plaintiffs say that Detroit's revised ordinance — created after a federal judge called the city's first attempt at an ordinance "likely unconstitutional" — has the
